The Ranchos of California
The original volume from which this book is taken,
Burgess McK. Shumway's Ranchos of California: Patented Private Land Grants Listed by County , was one of a series of noteworthy research projects produced by the Federal Writers Project of the Works Project Administration. The WPA was a Depression-era attempt by the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt to provide paying jobs for the nation's unemployed workers, including out-of-work artists, writers, and other creative individuals. The FWP took these unemployed authors, and set them to producing state and city travel guides, county records manuals, census indexes, local and regional histories, and a great many other projects of interest to the historian and researcher. Regrettably, many of the projected series were never finished, having been terminated with the outset of World War II. Also unfortunately, more than half of the books which did appear were published in mimeographed form only, in editions of no more than 250 copies, with poor typography (often typed copy), inferior paper, and cheap bindings. Few copies survive today, and most of these are brittle, faded, and difficult to read.

Shumway's project, originally produced in 1940-41, anticipated Robert G. Cowan's Ranchos of California: A List of Spanish Concessions, 1775-1822, and Mexican Grants, 1822-1846 (Historical Society of Southern California, 1977), a thoroughly excellent work in its own right. But Cowan's work was organized differently, by rancho name, and provided less detail than Shumway's pioneering effort, which is available today in just a handful of large research collections. Thus, when a well-known California book dealer, Allan Adrian, suggested that a new edition of Shumway might be appropriate, Borgo Press obtained a copy of the original, had it reset, and retitled it California Ranchos to avoid confusion with Cowan's book. The book was also checked for typographical and other errors, and thoroughly indexed. Robert G. Cowan graciously consented to provide a new preface.

Shumway's basic format, which organized the grants by the present-day county boundaries into which they would now fall, and then alphabetically by the name of the rancho, has been maintained in this new version. Ranchos straddling two contemporary counties are listed in both. A typical entry includes: rancho name, record number, present-day county/counties, area of grant, date of grant, governor making grant, recipient(s), repatented acreage, date of new patent, recipient(s), location.

The original Spanish and Mexican land grants were issued under a loose metes and bounds system that emphasized contemporary physical landmarks to establish the boundaries of each grant; these were often sufficiently ill-defined to cause disputes at a later date, even prior to statehood. Consequently, a number of the ranchos were re-granted a second time, sometimes to the same person(s) as before.

When California was admitted to the Union in 1850, it was erected as a public-domain state. Boundaries under the public-domain system are determined from a theoretical grid based around north-south meridians and east-west base lines. Three principal meridians were established in California between the years 1851-53: the Humboldt Meridian (HBM), located in northern California; the Mount Diablo Meridian (MDM), located in central California; and the San Bernardino Meridian (SBM), located in southern California. Intersecting these meridians at right angles are several base lines. Extending outward from these measures are six-mile-square townships, each having thirty-six one-mile-square sections. The numbers listed at the end of each entry in this book describe the township(s) into which the rancho now falls, the letter “T” indicating the distance from the base line, the letter “R” indicating the distance from the meridian.

Thus, “T IS, R11-12E, MDM” indicates that the rancho is located in Township 1 South, Range 11-12 East of the Mount Diablo Meridian.

Following establishment of state government in California, a Board of Land Commissioners was empowered (beginning in 1852) to adjudicate Spanish and Mexican claims. and to reissue properly surveyed patents using the public domain system now in effect. Some claims were rejected, others were not adjudicated until the 1880s, and still others wound up in the courts. Many of the original grants had long since been sold, split into smaller sections through inheritance or sale, or been subject to fraudulent claims. Most of the original records of the Board were destroyed in the San Francisco earthquake and fire in 1906. This book only lists those claims that were ultimately recognized as genuine, with new patents actually being issued.

Thanks to Allan Adrian for locating a copy of this book, and to the late Robert G. Cowan for providing a new introduction.

PREFACE

California's Land Grants

The land we now know as California was discovered in 1542 by Cabrillo, a Portuguese, flying the flag of Spain on the stern of his ship, just fifty years after Columbus's famous voyage. This new discovery was called Alta California, Baja California having already been named by some of Cortes's men eight or nine years earlier. California was first noted as an island on the world map of a respected, lotus-eating Dutch geographer; this mistake was copied by a number of his European colleagues, and the error persisted for a number of years.

The so-called Manila galleons, laden with riches of the East destined for Spain, found the northern route to Mexico the most satisfactory of possible transit points. This brought them to the coast of Alta California, but since they were not geographers, explorers, or conquerors, they had no interest in, and left no records of, what they saw.

In fact, none but a few buccaneers intruded on California life for nearly one hundred years. Sir Francis Drake, considered one of that brotherhood by the Spaniards, stopped on the California coast in 1579 to careen his ship. He took possession of the land for Queen Elizabeth I of England, calling it Nova Albion, and then left after staying no more than a month. England and Spain were not on the best of terms at that time, so Elizabeth found no advantage in pressing her claims to a land so entirely remote and unknown.

The tranquility of California was not really disturbed until the avarice of King Carlos III of Spain induced him to establish his claim through colonization, as had already been done in Baja, to a point as far north as the Spanish blood would tolerate. This policy was activated in 1769, when the major countries of Europe were already mounting several scientific expeditions to Baja to observe a rare transit of the planet Venus through the heavens. As the next transit would not occur for 108 years, scientists from all the civilized states of Europe were interested in getting as much data as possible. and the best viewing point was off the coast of Baja California.

Carlos ordered an expedition by land and sea to settle at what is now San Diego in the year 1769. Here the first mission was established, and within the next half century twenty more were built, spaced about one day's foot-travel apart, north to Sonoma. Thus was the seed planted.

It was the King's intention to have the missions gather the Indians, and civilize and educate them to build little communities around each church. The missions were conceded land as needed, so long as they did not encroach upon the Indian rancherias. Three towns were laid out, with lots to live upon and plots to farm: Branciforte, San Jose, and Los Angeles, the first of these disappearing soon thereafter. These towns were populated by convicts scraped out of Mexican jails, men and women who were promised freedom in exchange for hard labor and a chance at a new life.

An unexpected stratum of society emerged as early as 1784. Retired soldiers from the Presidios of Monterey, Santa Barbara, and San Francisco, rather than returning to their original homes in Mexico, asked for and received large land concessions to support cattle ranches. There were two major restrictions on these grants: first, that the concessions would not infringe on the Indian rancherias or their rights, or on the holdings of the twenty-one Franciscan missions. This was generally observed. Second, that no one was to build or actually live on the concessions. This was always ignored.

In 1784 the first three concessions were granted by Governor Fages to Dominguez, Verdugo, and Nieto, covering a total of about 100,000 acres of land in Los Angeles and Orange Counties, and California's pastoral period slowly came into being. During the Spanish period, there were thirty-two major concessions awarded, ten by one generous Governor alone. Even after the Mexican flag was raised, in 1822, there was no grand rush, fifteen grants being distributed in the first year, and then only twenty-five more over the next decade.

In these early decades many rancho owners, particularly in outlying areas, worried very little about their claims:

“This land has no value—there is so much of it, no one wants mine—I know where it is—I surveyed it from my saddle with a reala—I know that it extends from this pile of rocks with a cross on it (a mojonera) to the dry creek, and from the river to another mojonera—why should I bother about a map and spend $ 12 for a grant?” Attitudes began to change, however, after 1833.

By then a few foreigners, mostly English and American, had recognized the fact that the land could be used for many other useful purposes, and had joined the Catholic Church, sometimes adopting Spanish names. They then either married into families that had land, or induced the owners to sell them pieces of existing grants. The Mexicans, who saw a chance to benefit themselves financially while getting rid of what they perceived to be largely worthless property, were often all too eager to sell.

For the next thirteen years, ending with the American rebellion and conquest of 1846, about 700 ranchos were granted by the Mexican governors, many of them to white carpetbaggers. These included some regrantedings, duplications, and splitting of older, larger grants, now renamed by the heirs or assigns. The last of these officials, the wily Pio Pico, in order to secure the Jamul Rancho originally awarded him in 1831, made a new petition to himself, from himself; and then regranted it to himself, from himself—signed, sealed, and delivered.

The Californians had learned a few things from the Anglos.

NOTE

According to U.S. surveys, a “league” is equivalent to 2.633573 miles or 5,000 varas. Other authorities list the league as the equivalent of 8,000 varas (3.95 miles), with 17.5 leagues equal to each degree of the Earth’s circumference. A square league in the U.S. survey system is 6.935+ square miles, or roughly 4,438 acres. The Spanish yard, the vara, is equal to 2.781 feet, or 33.385 inches. A sitio usually refers to a residential plot of uncertain size. Spanish place names used by many of the rancheros include: arroyo (stream or water course), bolsa (pouch or bag), Canada (glen or dale or ravine), canon (canyon or ravine), corral (corral), huerta (orchard or garden), laguna (lake), llano (level area), ojo (spring), paso (pass), potrero (pasture), punta (headland or point), rancho (ranch), rincon (corner formed by the meeting of two walls or mountain ranges), rio (river), san(ta) (saint), sanjon or zanjon (deep ditch), sausal or sauzal (willow grove), sierra (mountain range), valle (valley).

ABOUT BURGESS McK. SHUMWAY

Burgess McKinnon Shumway was born 19 June 1898 on a farm near Harrisburg, Banner County, Nebraska, the son of Alson J. Shumway and Jennetta Rosenfelt. During World War I he enlisted in the U.S. Navy, and was released from service in 1919. He then returned to the University of Nebraska, where he took a law degree in 1922, commencing the practice of law at Scottsbluff, NE, where he specialized in title abstracting. He married Zora Wunderlich, and had at least one daughter, Phyllis. By 1940 he had resettled in Southern California, where he produced Ranchos of California as a WPA Project during 1940-41. He died in Los Angeles Co., CA, on 14 April 1960, aged 61 years.
